▼ business briefs

Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. announced a $38 million, one-million square foot expansion of its new James City County Import Distribution Center in Grove. Construction began in April. General Manager Tony Kral says the additional warehouse space is needed as Wal-Mart plans to add 130 additional retail stores to the company. The expansion will create 100 to 150 new jobs. Completion is expected in October.

▼ new directory completed

As part of a series of County efforts to maintain contact with its business community, the Office of Economic Development (OED) periodically surveys industrial, technical, and business service companies located at commercial sites in the County. Survey responses provide a better understanding of these companies and help to identify business trends and needs. Thanks to all who participated in this important project. To get a copy of the directory, visit the Office of Economic Development, located at the County Office Complex, 101 Mounts Bay Road, Building C. File copies are also available at the Williamsburg Regional Library.

▼ free business guides

Are you considering starting your own venture? There's a free booklet available, "Starting A Business," compiled by County departments that customarily deal with various business matters. The booklet contains useful tips and answers to common business questions, as well as points of contact for more information. A sample business plan and a list of business resources at the local, regional, state and national level are also included. To get a copy, call or visit the County Office of Economic Development, 757-253-6607 or the Commissioner of the Revenue's Office, County Complex, Building B, 757-253-6698. The booklet is also available at the libraries and online through the County's web site at www.james-city.va.us, under Economic Development.
